Magnolia Grange, located in Chesterfield, VA is Chesterfield County's finest Federal style plantation home. Many of the owners and occupants of Magnolia Grange have held public office and were instrumental in dictating the county's political development. The name Magnolia Grange derives from a circle of magnolia trees and formal boxwood gardens that once graced the lawn, destroyed after the Civil War to cultivate further farmland.

The house was built by William Winfree in 1823 and stayed in the family until 1845. Winfree was descended from an early Chesterfield County family. After the house passed out of the Winfree family, it was sold to a succession of owners. Several of Magnolia's owners faced financial difficulties and had to sell the property soon after buying it. The house retains virtually all of its ornate woodwork; most significant are elaborate ceiling medallions and the Federal mantels with slender Ionic columns

The property boasts more than 20 secluded acres overlooking the Mississippi River and historic Mormon Springs, a natural mineral spring. The house is on the National Historic National Historic Register of Historic Places, built in 1867 by French Icarian cabinet maker, Adolphe Cambre.

Four generations of Cambres lived on the working farm until it was sold to Relly and Lois Fowler in 1979. The Fowlers preserved the home using the property for the annual Salt Box craft show in the 80s and early 90s. Many of the Fowler family gatherings were held on the property through the years including two weddings, many Easters, birthdays, and picnics. The property is currently owned by Rebecca Williamson, granddaughter of Relly and Lois. She is dedicated to preserving the house and sharing it with the public. The house itself has three bedrooms, one full bathroom, one half bathroom, and modern kitchen facilities. There is a large open space in front of the house with a patio, and another open area behind the house surrounded by trees with glimpses of the Mississippi River. A large 20 by 40 foot outdoor patio overlooks the forest ravine which makes a beautiful and relaxing area for sitting or dancing.

Why do people consider this beautiful location active with spirits from the past? Some believe that the residual and intelligent haunts may have to do with the land it is on. Many

In 1845, Thomas Ritch erected the Ritch's Hotel on Main St. in Napanoch, NY for those who wanted to escape the city life. Due to the convenience of the nearby railroad, many travelers frequent the hotel. In 1851, Ritch sold the hotel where it became known as the Hungerford's Hotel. Mr. Hungerford catered to the same clientele as Mr. Ritch, including the elite Gentleman's Club that boasted a very distinguished membership and was quick to dandle the ladies of the bordello on their knees. The hotel changed hands a few times but in 1887, Adolph Wagner became the new landlord. Eight years later, on March 18, 1895, a nearby home in Napanoch caught fire. The fire quickly spread leaving ruin in its wake. The Shanley Hotel was not spared the damage and was tragically burned to the ground. Mr. Wagner would not see his investment go to waste so he quickly rebuilt and the hotel was back in business by November of the same year. The most notable owner and for whom the hotel is still named was James Shanley. When his family immigrated to New York City from Ireland, James and his brothers found success in opening restaurants and hotels across the country. He moved upstate and discovered the beauty of the hotel and the town of Napanoch. He purchased the hotel for his own on October 1, 1906. Mr. Shanley gave it his own touch by adding a bowling alley, billiard room and even a barber shop to the building. James's success brought prestige to the community but it wasn't simply his ability to produce revenue that made the people of Napanoch love him. He was a good man with a kind heart and an outgoing personality; people naturally were drawn to him, including the lovely Beatrice Rowley. The two were married at the Shanley Hotel on April 26, 1910 and took off to the Nation's Capital to enjoy their honeymoon. When the newlyweds returned from Washington D.C., they were met by a parade welcoming them home. It was a grand celebration that night that would signal a grand future for the young couple, that is, until tragedy after tragedy befell the family. Unfortunately, tragedy struck the couple. Beatrice loved children and dreamed of having a large family with her beloved James. On January 6, 1912, she gave birth to their first daughter, Kathleen. The poor soul only lived a little shy of six months. She would go on to give birth to two more children, James Shanley, Jr who lived four and a half months and William Shanley who died at a little over nine months. Her broken heart can still be felt within the walls of the Haunted Shanley Hotel. There is more to the story that is the Shanley Hotel that you will get to hear about that night. Your guest investigator for the night is none other than Daryl Marston from the television show Ghost Hunters! Daryl is a seasoned paranormal investigator and is the co-owner of Paranormal Warehouse. One of the biggest paranormal websites around and the lead investigator the You Tube series Epic Haunts!

The Norfolk Masonic Temple is a majestic 78,000 square foot building which the fraternal home to eight Masonic lodges, three Masonic related appendant bodies as well as two active appendant organizations. The most iconic building in Norfolk, VA has seen its share of tragedy. Years ago one of the head Deacons, The Honorable Judge Fentress died of a heart attack during a Mason ceremony. Another incident occurred when someone was accidentally locked inside the Masonic Temple after the superintendent locked up for the weekend. Trying to find a way out, he discovered a metal ladder to an upper walk space. Realizing there was no way out, he climbed back down the ladder. He lost his balance and fell the rest of the way down, breaking his neck and dying at the bottom of the ladder. He was not found until days later when the superintendent came back to open the Temple. Local paranormal group RTL PARANORMAL has investigated the building many times and have captured things they cannot explain. Loud noises, sounds of footsteps, EVPs (electronic voice phenomena), spirit box communication. Not only will you have the opportunity to ghost hunt this magnificent building with RTL PARANORMAL, but you will be ghost hunting with none other than Daryl Marston and Kristen Luman from the television show Ghost Hunters! Doors open at 6:30 PM where you may roam the Temple a bit, get your photos taken with Daryl, Kristen, and RTL PARANORMAL before the event.
